

App name: Wokamon

App icon

Star rating:

What is the app designed to do?

This app is designed to motivate the user to walk in order to level up and gain crystals which can be redeemed for new characters. There is also a feature within this app to gain achievements such as walk for three days in a row.

Who is the app designed for? What age groups would you recommend this app to and why?

I would say that this app is designed for younger children aged 5-12 because I think it wouldn't really motivate an older person to keep walking in order to level up.

What are some of the pros and cons of the app?

Pros: It would really motivate a young person to level up and unlock characters using the crystals to unlock these.

Cons: It doesn't tell you when to stop walking and take a break you could just walk for hours and this wouldn't be too healthy for the user.

Can you sync information from other devices e.g. Fitbit?

Yes you can sync information from other apps/devices like fitbit and apple health

Can you compete with others using this app?

Yes there is a in game leader board which could motivate you to walk more then your friend.

Are there any necessary in-app purchases?

There is an in app purchase however this purchase is optionally and isn't necessary to continue playing the game.

Are there any adverts?

For the duration I was playing this game and testing it I didn't come across any adverts neither an option to "go add free" which is the case in some apps.

Did it accurately record physical activity?

Yes this app does record your steps and physical activity you can also go into your previous activity to see how active you are becoming.

Is there anything unique about this app in comparison with other physical activity apps?

I wouldn't say there is anything unique about this app other then it is very much designed to motivate younger children into keeping active.